

“She’s a wild and crazy gal.” These words have not been said of Dr. Simon since her college days at the University of Arkansas. Originally from Illinois, Dr. Simon has lived in the south most of her life. After graduating from Mt. St. Mary Academy in Little Rock, she earned degrees at UA, University of Missouri, and finally, University of Kansas. She worked as a school psychologist for a couple years in Kansas before moving to Houston, TX for her pre-doctoral internship. Dr. Simon then circled back around to Little Rock where she currently lives with her husband, son, and rescue dog, Super. As for her professional interests, Dr. Simon has focused on some of the practical aspects of school psychology practice. For example, she has done work on improving ways to transition children from hospital settings back into the school, use of various methods to identify children with specific learning disabilities, and consulting with schools to develop Response-to-Intervention systems. If she’s not at work, she could be commuting (to LR), in a yoga class, walking with a friend, riding her bike, going to her son’s soccer games, reading a murder mystery book, or just spending time with family.
